Residential/Homeowner Treated Wood Waste (TWW)

A homeowner does not require a variance to manage TWW generated incidental to owning and maintenance their own place of residence as long as they do not transport the TWW themselves. If a homeowner transports TWW to an authorized transfer station or landfill, then the homeowner should have a variance (or follow hazardous waste rules). However, a transfer station or landfill is authorized to accept TWW from a homeowner without a variance, they are required to provide a notice explaining the rules for transporting TWW, and they must collect contact information and pass it on to California Department of Toxics and Substance Control (DTSC). The contact information will be used by DTSC to identify anyone that is repeatedly shipping TWW without authorization, despite having been informed of the rules.
